

Dr Michael Loy – “The British School at Athens is very proud to hold a modest teaching and reference collection, we would be absolutely delighted to arrange a handling session for you”

Nothing brings you closer to the ancient world than holding it in your hands. Ancient pots weren't made to sit behind glass cases in museums – they were made to be held, carried, poured, turned and felt. Come and hold history in your hands – and ask an expert what it's like to dig some of this stuff up!

The British School at Athens is very proud to hold a modest teaching and reference collection containing representative archaeological objects from all periods of antiquity. From the Bronze Age to the Classical, from pottery to stone inscriptions, the BSA collection is open for you and your students to come and explore!

We would be absolutely delighted to arrange a handling session for you and up to ten students. Come and get up-close and personal with the ancient past and bring Classics to life in a unique and tangible way.

To find out more about the objects available in our collection and to make arrangements, please contact the Assistant Director.
