

ADDITIONAL RESOURCES

- i - Building Asterion: Support for Neurodiversity in Classics. Asterion mascot, designed by Laura Jenkinson-Brown
- ii - All White? - The Colorfulness of Ancient Sculpture (Google Arts & Culture)
- iii - Hooray! The long-awaited 'Amarantus and his Neighbourhood' book is now available! A brand-new story about a big-nosed wine seller & his neighbourhood, based in a real insula and on recent archaeological research.

How We Wrote Amarantus by Caroline Lawrence

- iv - Launch of TheDefix, an open access Heurist database hosted by the University of Hamburg at the chair of Ancient History. It "aims to collect all published curse inscriptions from the ancient world, providing information on their material and textual features along with their bibliography."
- v - Juan de Lara's (@UCLarchaeology) virtual lecture on "Experiencing the Parthenon: Temple illumination using 3D physically-based rendering"
- vi - Bringing Life to Ancient Objects Garstang Museum of Archaeology
- vii - Things we share. The Vindolanda Trust. Toilet seat, stool, spoon. Do these things sound familiar to you? Maybe our connection with the Romans is stronger than we think! Perhaps things from 2000 years ago are not so different and you would easily recognise them as those we use today.
- viii - How to make a clay tablet, part 1 - It's All Greek To Me
- ix - The incredible Roma Ieri Oggi website continues to post old photographs on the web. This one here is a view of the piazza of the Colosseum. This one here is a view of the piazza of the Colosseum, but looking up the Sacred Way to the Arch of Titus. It's high quality, and can be zoomed in to an amazing extent.

x - Venus of the Sewers - JSTOR Daily A small circle of stone stands today in the Roman Forum. Passed over by most visitors, the unobtrusive spot is the remains of a fascinating piece of Roman history: it was once the shrine of Venus Cloacina – in other words, the Venus of the Sewers.

xi - The Building of the Via Appia - Ancient Rome Discovers its Hegemony? Ray Laurence xii - Interview: The Bronze Lie with Myke Cole “Shattering the Myth of Spartan Warrior Supremacy”

xiii - Open-access resources for the Classics-keen and curious. The Antigone team are pleased to pool together here the most useful, freely accessible Classics tools online. There are eighty-odd items as it stands, each chosen on the grounds of utility. If you think we really should have something we don't, please drop us a line. To explore any of the sites, just click on the caption and crack on!